

ADVENT OF ADVANCED VACCINE PLATFORMS

To counter immunosenescence, vaccine technology has evolved beyond traditional live-attenuated or inactivated models. Scientists now utilise specialised platforms to trigger strong immune responses even in older adults:

ADJUVANTED AND HIGH-DOSE FORMULATIONS: Enhanced vaccines—such as the recombinant shingles vaccine and high-dose influenza shots—include add-ons (adjuvants) that forcefully wake up a sluggish immune system, providing protection that lasts up to a decade

NEXT-GENERATION MRNA PLATFORMS: These systems allow for rapid, annual composition updates to precisely match fast-mutating viral agents, like modern Omicron subvariants

HIGHER-VALENT CONJUGATE TECH:

For bacterial threats, newer conjugate vaccines (like PCV20 and PCV21) simplify adult protection by covering vastly more resistant strains in a single dose compared to the multi-shot sequences of the past

ANNA JOSE @ T*Puram

INDIA is experiencing a seasonal surge in influenza cases, with a higher number of cases reported in states and major cities, including Delhi, Kerala, Karnataka, and Maharashtra. As older adults, young children, pregnant women, and people with chronic health conditions (like diabetes, heart disease, or lung illness) face a higher risk of severe complications, doctors are recommending that they get the annual flu shot.

The Association of Physicians of India (API), along with 23 national and regional medical bodies, formed a consensus on guidelines in 2026, formally recommending annual influenza vaccination as a core preventative measure for adults, particularly high-risk groups and older populations.

Flu vaccines can prevent complications and deaths from an influenza virus infection, said Dr Sunny P Orathel, pulmonologist and former president of the Indian Medical Association (IMA), Kochi chapter. "Several hospitals now have vaccination clinics. Many elderly people are now getting flu shots. Elderly people, along with people with diabetes, cancer, kidney, and liver diseases, should get the flu shot. Because people with lifestyle diseases and chronic diseases have comparatively low immunity, it is recommended that such patients get the shot. Getting flu shots may not prevent the occurrence of fever. However, it can prevent complications and

DECLINE IN RESISTANCE

As adults age, they face two distinct challenges to their natural immunity:

IMMUNOSENESCENCE: Starting as early as age 50, the immune system undergoes a progressive natural weakening. The body produces fewer naive T-cells and B-cells, making it harder to fight off brand-new infections or respond robustly to older, traditional vaccines

WANING IMMUNITY: The protection granted by childhood vaccines naturally fades over the decades. For instance, a lack of regular boosters leaves adults highly susceptible to diseases like pertussis (whooping cough) and tetanus deaths from influenza and other communicable diseases," he said.

Because the influenza strain changes almost every year, people get flu vaccines annually. According to the World Health Organisation (WHO), in India, both seasonal influenza and avian influenza (in wild birds and poultry) have been widely reported. Influenza viruses are constantly changing and can infect both humans and animals. Influenza viruses have several types (A, B, and C) and subtypes.

According to Dr Sunny, the latest pneumococcal vaccine needs to be administered only once. "Earlier, elderly people had to be administered it once every five years. Now, with the latest vaccines available, one dose is enough," he said.

"Vaccination is an indispensable preventive strategy against influenza, specifically for individuals who live with or care for high-risk individuals, older adults (>50 years), pregnant women, children, and individuals with chronic medical conditions," states the study. "Clinical practice guidelines 2019: Indian consensus-based recommendations on influenza vaccination in adults," published in 2020.

The study also stated that there are variations in the peak influenza season across various parts of the country. It recommended influenza vaccination from September to October for cities with temperate seasonality and April-May for cities with the peak monsoon season in July-September.

The immune system undergoes a progres-

COMBATING ANTIMICROBIAL RESISTANCE

The drop in human resistance has historically meant a heavier reliance on antibiotics, which directly drives the global crisis of antimicrobial resistance

CONTROL ANTIBIOTIC USAGE: According to WHO, scaling up vaccines against 24 primary pathogens could reduce global antibiotic usage by 22%—saving roughly 2.5 billion daily doses of antibiotics every year. By stopping the infection before it starts, vaccines prevent bacteria from ever mutating into drug-resistant "superbugs"

PREVENTING "BYSTANDER" SELECTION: When an adult gets a viral infection (like the flu), their respiratory defences are damaged, opening the door for secondary bacterial infections. Doctors then prescribe antibiotics sive natural weakening in a person when they cross the age of 50. Add to it the waning effect of vaccines administered during childhood in the absence of boosters over the decades. This makes it harder for the body to fight off brand-new infections or respond robustly to older, traditional vaccines. To counter immunosenescence, vaccine technology has evolved as scientists now utilise specialised platforms to trigger stronger immune responses even in older adults.

"As resistance to infection is declining, the chances of getting infected are much higher compared to previous years. Within days or weeks, any infection can travel and spread. The ease of spread of infection is an issue as many zoonotic diseases, Nipah, Zika, and monkeypox, are being reported. Also, almost everyone has liver disorders, obesity, COPD, and diabetes. So classification of vaccines in different age groups remains crucial, as the need for vaccines is different," said Dr K K Purushothaman, a public health expert based in Kerala.
